Sunday School Anniversary.

Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.

I send you an account of the Anniversary of the Lewinsville Sabbath School, hoping that it may not be unacceptable to your readers.

The thirteenth celebration of this School took place on the 14th of the present month. The day was, in every respect, propitious; and, about 10 o'clock in the morning, the crowd began to assemble in a beautiful grove of oaks, about equi-distant between Falls Church and Lewinsville, and not far from Pimmet Brook. All seemed to be in good humor, determining to please and be pleased. Quite a sensation was produced at the appearance of the carriage on the ground, bringing in the little children comprising the Sabbath School, for whose gratification the entertainment was principally intended. The carriage was festooned with the Star Spangled banner, and arrayed in the choicest flowers of the season, and it was quite animating to hear the hymns of the happy group.

The assembly was called to order by Mr. Carpenter, the Superintendent of the School, who has labored with fidelity in the good cause. The proceedings of the day were commenced by some brief, but pertinent remarks, from Mr. Coe. He was followed by Mr. Carpenter, who held out strong encouragements to perseverance in the good work. The speeches were interspersed with hymns from a choir, composed of gentlemen and ladies, and the woods were animated by the charming melody. The bugle then gave the signal for a repast, when the children and their teachers first repaired to the sylvan board. All the other guests were successively served.

In the afternoon, the assembly was addressed by the Rev. Mr. Smith, originally from Connecticut, but last from Princeton, N. J. He drew a pleasing picture of youthful life, but, at the same time, pointed out the perils by which it is always environed. His remarks contributed much to the satisfaction of the day. After a plentiful dessert, the Rev. T. B. Balch, the "old man eloquent," was introduced to the stand by the Superintendent. He spoke for the space of forty-five minutes, expatiating on the origin and advantages of Sabbath School instruction, illustrating the subject by various historical allusions. He paid a deserved compliment to the Northerners, who, in a few years past, have added so much to the population of Fairfax, and contrasted the present agriculture of the county with what it was during his residence at "Salona Farm," in this vicinity.

We then broke up, and our homes were but the more pleasant for a day spent in the woods. ONE OF THE DAUGHTERS OF EVE.
